Opening: Megan Marrin at David Lewis

Having worked on collaborative projects with Tyler Dobson, Elif Erkan, and Nora Schultz, Megan Marrin will now have her first solo show in New York. For one of those past shows, Marrin and Dobson created paintings of their vacations together in Europe; for another, she and Erkan made ambiguous canvases that resembled worn-down pieces of cement walls. In both cases, Marrin turned her attention to the process of making artworks—what would it mean to make an image of one's own ready-made image, and what happens when an artwork resembles the wall on which it's shown? Information about this exhibition is sparse, but it's teased with an intriguing painting: The Breed (2017), an image of the so-called corpse flower that bloomed last year in the New York Botanical Garden.

David Lewis, 88 Eldridge Street, 5th Floor, 6–8 p.m.
